The professional activities of a master of philology lie in the areas of humanitarian knowledge and require interpersonal, intercultural, and mass communications in spoken, written, and virtual forms.

A master of philology:

- Knows languages in theoretical, practical, synchronic, diachronic and sociocultural aspects.
- Knows Russian and foreign literature, including folklore in their theoretical and historical aspects, taking into account the mechanisms of their development in different regions and countries;
- Can work with various types of texts (written, oral, virtual, including hypertext and text elements in multimedia);
- Has oral, written, and virtual communication skills.

The education process prepares students for research, applied, pedagogical, project, and project management tasks in the humanitarian field.

Specializations within this programme

Creation, Analysis, and Expert Examination of Texts

Philology (Russian as a Foreign Language)

The program aims at training highly qualified and competitive specialists in philology, teaching Russian as a foreign language, and scientific research activities.

Holders of the master's degree can work in the professional field of Russian as a foreign language, language system and methods of teaching Russian, creation of tests in Russian as a foreign language, and fundamentals of scientific research.

This is a practically oriented course. All master's students are engaged in research projects, participate in conferences, and write research papers. They also have teaching practice, which allows them to prepare and teach lessons in groups of foreign students with different levels of Russian. This program covers important professional subjects on the methods of teaching Russian as a foreign language, on the modern Russian language, on the fundamentals of test theory and practice of testing, on linguistic culturology, and ethnopsycholinguistics, etc.

Graduates of this program are in-demand professionals in various fields due to their high level of training in teaching Russian as a foreign language, skills of scientific work and its presentation. Masters of philology can always find a congenial employment: in education (teacher of Russian as a foreign language) and science (linguist researcher), in the field of intercultural communications, in large government institutions and business corporations with big document flow, in the editorial board of publishing houses and media, in communication media (press secretary), and in business (guide, translator or interpreter).

The scope of professional activity includes teaching Russian as a foreign language, philological research, intercultural communication, writing and editing media texts.
