The programme is designed to train media professionals with the technical and creative skills to work in creative industries and produce media content of varying complexity for different platforms.

The course is suited for people from mixed academic backgrounds, including journalism, politics and economics, engineering, and arts.

By combining work on projects in media production and practical experience in educational partner's spaces with academic research for their Master's Degree, our graduates acquire a broad range of skills. They are ready to adapt successfully to the changing demands of the creative industries and able to think analytically about the role and activities of mass media communications.
