The "Psychology" Bachelor degree program of the NSU Institute for Medicine and Psychology is aimed at training young researchers and practitioners. Our students get fundamental theoretical knowledge of the human psychic and body as well as practical training.

After the first two years they can choose to specialize in:

- Clinical Psychology;
- Occupational Psychology

Specializations within this programme

Clinical Psychology and Counselling

As part of this program the department trains highly qualified specialists for further work in specialized hospitals and clinical hospitals and mental and drug treatment clinics.

This specialisation is designed for those who want to learn to understand the peculiarities of individual psychological work with the person, to grasp the root causes of the problems of the person, for those who want to help patients become aware of their own personality and overcome the psychological difficulties that a person cannot overcome alone. Here, future professionals learn the basics of psychosomatic medicine, family psychology, master the skills of counseling and psychotherapy, learn to understand the psychology of stress and different theories of neuroses. They also study the basics of drug addiction and alcoholism prevention.

Occupational Psychology

The program in Occupational Psychology is aimed at preparing professional psychologists and consultants who implement their skills in the socio-psychological and advisory centers, employment agencies, and commercial organizations.

This program is designed for those who want to study the characteristics of behavior of a person in the organization, her/his adaptation to the specific nature of working on a team, want to help managers and employees to organize their work in the most efficient way. Here the students learn to understand the peculiarities of organizational culture and conflicts, acquire personnel management skills, learn the psychology of advertising and the psychology of decision-making.
