Programme Focus

Within this programme, the students are offered a chance to master two foreign languages up to the Proficiency level. The programme aims to enable the students to carry out translation and interpreting activities. The students acquire profound knowledge of cultural and historical background of linguistics and intercultural communication as well as theory and practice of translation. They develop an understanding and acquire tools of linguistic analysis and computer-based techniques in translation. Being free users of at least two foreign languages, programme graduates easily make written and oral translations of different types in all spheres of communication.

Programme advantages

Lectures, seminars and written papers are designed to guide the students in learning to apply theoretical knowledge to concrete studies of their future profession.

The students of the programme work with academic staff who are at the leading edge of research, so that the excitement of pioneering ideas is conveyed. High-quality education is based on high-quality research that covers the study of the whole spectrum of disciplines – from the arts and humanities to sciences.

The benefit of being a member of a large, vibrant and intellectually curious student body helps to spend time productively and pleasantly.

Taking the programme students have a good opportunity to master their professional skills in translation and interpreting.

Graduates' expertise and career opportunities

The programme graduates easily find jobs at state and municipal governments, diplomatic missions, cultural centres, prestigious local and large foreign companies, banks, media industry and television, industry of tourism and hospitality, major research institutions and laboratories, and so on. They are highly qualified to organize and manage different processes, to eliminate conflicts and disagreements in negotiations and to build and strengthen interpersonal ties using foreign languages. They certainly can continue their education in the chosen field.
