The master's degree program is aimed at developing students' personal qualities and forming cultural and professional competencies. Students acquire knowledge, skills and abilities in public legal, private law and criminal law spheres of two legal systems: Russian and German.

Objectives of the programme:

- to formulate a comprehensive interdisciplinary understanding of the German and Russian legal systems;
- to carry out interdisciplinary comparative legal scientific and applied research in the field of Russian and German law;
- to prepare a competitive graduate who is able to carry out activities in the Russian and German legal systems at a high professional level.

The master's degree programme "Deutsches und Russisches Recht/German and Russian Law" is implemented by the Law School of Siberian Federal University in cooperation with the University of Passau (Germany). The program is aimed at further research activities with the study of German and Russian law. Graduates have two degrees in law: a degree of Siberian Federal University and a degree of the University of Passau.

The master's program is unique and allows you to:

- study in Germany during one academic year; - obtain an LL.M degree of the University of Passau;
- study the peculiarities of the German legal system in the context of its comparison with the Russian law;
- get a Russian master's degree in law;
- to visit interesting interdisciplinary courses of leading teachers, including the experimental sites of Krasnoyarsk Territory, as well as the University of Passau;
- become an in-demand professional.

The master's program is implemented by highly qualified teaching staff from the University of Passau and Siberian Federal University. The program is for law students.
