The PhD Program in finance and banking is aimed at two target groups of potential candidates:

The first group is made up of local Russian graduates and specialists of all ages who are eager to get the honourable higher education doctorate degree at the high-ranked and reputable Russian university. It's particularly suitable for those who are targeting at academic development for personal or professional reasons, as the programs is based on blended and e-learning methods, rather than traditional styles of learning which commonly require a personal visit.

The second group are students and specialists from countries with transitional economies and who cannot afford to live abroad for a long time and thus would prefer, for personal or professional reasons, to study according to the blended learning methods, and not according to the traditional approaches requiring a regular personal visits to the institution.
