The development of Russia's interaction with the countries of the Asia-Pacific region (APR) determines the priority of educational and scientific programs in international relations.

To cooperate with the countries of the Asia-Pacific region, highly qualified specialists and professionals who know foreign languages, are well versed in the problems of global politics, have unique competencies in international relations. They are the ones that are trained in our magistracy.

This master's program provides for the study of the system of international relations, problems, and trends in the development of world politics, issues of national security, and foreign policy of Russia and other states.

The uniqueness of the "International Relations" direction includes the extensive experience of FEFU teachers, leading foreign professors, and practicing diplomats. For graduates of the program, this implies ample opportunities for employment and further education in the postgraduate study of FEFU

This educational program is aimed at studying international relations in the Asia-Pacific region, Russian foreign policy, and the possible use of the inner Far East in regional integration processes.
