By addressing problems of philosophical science and society, rational human activity and behaviour with reference to the philosophical system of Immanuel Kant, you will learn not just how to think and analyse rationally, but also how to influence people's minds and social processes through logic and logical reasoning. All of this will enable you to freely apply your knowledge in the fields of digital humanities, international relations and management.

Specializations within this programme

Main Courses

- Philosophy as a Science (historical and philosophical perspective);
- The Problem of Unity of Scientific Knowledge in the History of Philosophy;
- Ethics of Practical Rationality;
- Conceptions of Scientific Rationality;
- Analytic Philosophy;
- Recent Trends and Current Issues in Foreign Philosophy.

Practical training and career opportunities

Leading Russian and international educators and expert researchers will open up to you and with you new opportunities for the application of knowledge in the field of the Humanities and the study of social processes. The internships are carried out in different formats: case studies, trainings, practical assignments, experimental work, as well as participation in scientific conferences and internships at major world scientific centres which allow the students to build a path for your professional development and find useful contacts for career growth.

Advanced skills in logical and philosophical analysis of functioning of different areas of life enable graduates of this programme to choose an area of their own interest — from working in business organisations to carrying out scientific work — and continue with further development in it.
