This program provides a comprehensive, well-balanced overview of the countries and people of Asia. Students select at least one language (Arabic, Chinese, Korean or Japanese) to study in-depth and choose a study track: history and culture or socio-economic development. Much time is devoted to the acquisition of practical skills through working with various Asian institutions and business models, as well as through the analysis of socio-political processes. Graduates work in academia and the private and public sectors in positions connected to developments in Asia and Russian engagement in the region.
