Master's degree in Sociology of Politics and International Relations aims to give students a thorough knowledge and understanding of historical and contemporary developments in the society, politics, economics and culture of this large and diverse area.

The program is designed for students who want to meet the needs of a variety of employers in major public, commercial and voluntary institutional settings and who wish to acquire a specialized knowledge of sociology and international relations. It is also intended to cater for newly graduated first degree holders seeking to enter employment in areas which require people with an in-depth knowledge of these academic fields and highly developed analytical skills.

If you wish to grow as a specialist in the area of international relations, sociology and economy as a part of the globalized world, this Master's degree in Sociology of Politics and International Relations is irreplaceable for achieving your aims.

The program is open for both local and foreign students. Therefore, we do acknowledge the difference in students' backgrounds in the language, sociology, political studies and international relations. However, this diversity enables professors to consider each academic issue from very different angles encouraging the development of the analysis and comparison skills.
